

Home & Auto Invasion

A person experiencing a home or automobile break-in is particularly vulnerable to identity related fraud as consequence of stolen documents/computers and/or compromised personal information.

Typically, a home or automobile break-in is so disconcerting that most victimized policyholders tend to focus on the personal violation and the loss of tangible assets and not about how vulnerable their identity has become as a result of the break-in event.

Most break-in victims greatly appreciate the attention to protecting against further crimes, which could also arise from the theft. It's important to note that financial losses from identity theft can exceed the aggregate losses arising from burglary, larceny, and motor vehicle theft by many multiples.

In a world where we typically use technology (lap tops, mobile devices, ipads etc) to store personal information, a home or auto invasion can provide thieves to a treasure trove of our personal data if it is not secure and these devices are accessed or stolen.

Our fraud advocates will assist in running through a checklist of information that victims should review and with our help, take action. This would include notifying financial and government institutions, PIN and Password changes etc.

If the victim is using our service because it is provided by their insurer we will often be contacted by the claims department to ensure a smooth handling of the case in conjunction with the insurer.
