

Military Personnel

Military personnel and their families, particularly those stationed overseas, are considered soft targets for identity thieves.

This is because their crimes take longer to be discovered, providing criminals a longer period to perfect the theft and cover the evidentiary trail.

The Department of Defense reports that approximately 165,000 troops are currently stationed outside of the United States.

However, military personnel can now make use of unique, proactive measures to protect their identity.

ID Resolution's fraud specialists will place Active Duty Military Fraud Alerts on the credit files of the three credit bureaus. The alert will remain for twelve months unless the service man or woman would like it removed before it expires.

The alert will also remove their name from pre-approved credit card offers and other personalized marketing for two years.
