

Travel & Other Lost Documents

The loss of sensitive and critical documentation, while traveling domestically or internationally, provoke instant panic – even for the most experienced traveler.

The complications of a lost wallet, driver's license, credit card or airline ticket are bad enough in the U.S., but a stranded traveler in a foreign locale who has lost their passport, visa and cash can easily become overwhelmed.

Throughout a period of crisis, when a victim contacts ID Resolution, their personal fraud specialist may initiate a variety of procedures. These include traditional case file management as well as coordinating communications between victim and family members.

Additionally, the fraud specialist may be the single point of contact to government agencies, financial institutions and employers during the recovery process. The goals of this service are the replacement of lost or stolen documentation (where possible), financial information protection, assisting with access to the victims financial accounts, and helping return the victim to his home on schedule or as quickly as possible.

After the victims return, the fraud specialist continues with necessary follow up to bring resolution to a successful conclusion.

The Identity Travel Response can be enhanced to include proactive measures that can be taken before a trip.

These steps include ID Resolution Tip Sheets outlining precaution to take prior to a vacation or business trip.
